Very often, especially in Andalusia, he is old and rather infirm. One is often sorry for him as he humps along with his sword trundling behind him. But he has the wisdom that goes with age. If he sees a row he looks at it with his blind eye and allows it to simmer down—a very good thing with frows.

If you ask a Spanish policeman a question he is politeness itself. But his answer will be wrong. He is a mine of misleading information. He doesn't know. Indeed, what he doesn't know indeed, what he doesn't know about the names of streets and the way to get to them and things generally would fill an encyclopedia. If you want to know anything you must not ask a Spanish policeman. Respect him, for he is of the best, but don't ask him questions.
